The Routledge Handbook of New Security Studies
Edited by J. Peter Burgess, PRIQ, Oslo, Norway

This new Handbook gathers together state-of-the-art theoretical reflection and empirical research by a group of leading international scholars in the subdiscipline of Critical Security Studies. In today's globalised setting, the challenge of maintaining security is no longer limited to the traditional foreign-policy and military tools of the nation-state, and security and insecurity are no longer considered as dependent only upon geopolitics and military strength, but rather are also seen to depend upon social, economic, environmental, ethical models of analysis and tools of action. The contributors discuss and evaluate this fundamental shift in four key areas:

• New Security Concepts
• New Security Subjects
• New Security Objects
• New Security Practices.

Offering a comprehensive theoretical and empirical overview of this evolving field, this book will be essential reading for all students of critical security studies, human security, international/global security, political theory and IR in general.

Critical Security Studies
An Introduction
Columbia Peoples, Swansea University, UK and Nick Vaughan-Williams, University of Exeter, UK

Critical Security Studies introduces students of Politics and International Relations to the sub-field through a detailed yet accessible survey of emerging theories and practices. Written in an accessible and clear manner, this textbook:

• offers a comprehensive and up-to-date introduction to critical security studies
• locates Critical Security Studies within the broader context of social and political theory
• evaluates fundamental theoretical positions in critical security studies against backdrop of new security challenges.

The book is divided into two main parts. The first part, ‘Approaches’, surveys the newly extended and contested theoretical terrain of Critical Security Studies, and the different schools within the subdiscipline, including Feminist, Postcolonial and Poststructuralist viewpoints. The second part, ‘Issues’, will then offer examples of how these various theoretical approaches have been put to work against the backdrop of a diverse range of issues in contemporary security practices, from environmental, human and homeland security to border security and the ‘War on Terror’.

The historical and geographical scope of the book is deliberately broad and readers will be introduced to a number of key illustrative case studies. Each of the chapters in Part 2 will act to concretely illustrate one or more of the approaches discussed in Part 1, with clear internal referencing allowing the text to act as a holistic learning tool for students.

Feminist Security Studies
A Narrative Approach
Annick Wibben, University of San Francisco, USA

This book rethinks security theory from a feminist perspective, illustrating what feminist security concerns are, why they remain outside the purview of security studies, and what can be done to address them more successfully through the development of a comprehensive framework. It constitutes a major contribution to the fields of security studies and feminist IR, uniquely engaging feminism, security, and strategic studies. While furthering theoretical and normative questions posed by feminists, it is based on security as it has been theorized in the field of IR. In gathering materials from the emerging field of feminist security studies, the book develops a comprehensive framework for the field. As such, it will be the work that scholars, students, and practitioners will turn to for years to come.

The geopolitics of American Insecurity

Terror, Power and Foreign Policy

Edited by Francois Debrix, Florida International University, USA and Mark Lucy, University of Lancaster, UK

This edited volume examines the political, social, and cultural insecurities that the United States is faced with in the aftermath of its post-9/11 foreign policy and military ventures.

Selected Contents:
- Acknowledgments: Introduction: US Foreign Policy after 9/11
- Hyper-Power: Mark J. Lacy and Francois Debrix
- 1. Hyper-Power or Hype-Power?
- The US after Kandahar, Karbala, and Katrina
- 2. American Insecurities and the Ontopolitics of US Pharmacopoeia
- Larry George
- Torture and the Passage to Torture: Making Sense of Insurgency and Legitimacy Crimes in Past and Present Wars of Attrition
- Alexander D. Bardon
- 4. Torturefest and the Passage to Torture: Making Sense of Insurgency and Legitimacy Crimes in Past and Present Wars of Attrition

- 6. Deserting Sovereignty? the Securitization of Undocumented Migration in the United States
- Matthew Coleman
- Julian Reid
- Kosuke Shimizu
- 9. The Aesthetic Emergency of the Avian Flu
- Simon Dalby and Matthew Paterson
- 11. Zombie Democracy
- Patricia Molloy

This book analyses some of the key problems explored in Paul Virilio's theorising on war and security. Each chapter begins with an example from popular culture - from video games, on-line graphic novels to films from around the world - that begins to introduce the specific question and proceeds to develop a critical engagement with his work. One of the key themes that emerges through the chapters is the importance of the idea of 'disappearance' - the aesthetics of disappearance and the politics of disappearance - that is developed through his work: it will be argued that the politics of disappearance explored in different ways in his work provides a disturbing and insightful introduction to the key questions in the politics of security that will shape the twenty-first century.

Terror and the Politics of Catastrophe

Risk, Security and Modernity

Edited by Claudia Aradau, Open University, UK and Rens Van Munster, University of Southern Denmark

This book explores the governmentality of terror post-9/11 as a complex discursive and institutional formation deployed at the horizon of a catastrophic future. It unpacks the risk practices deployed in the ‘war on terror’ by taking seriously the policy-makers’ imaginaries of catastrophe. If the governance of terrorism is essentially made possible by the description of the future as ‘catastrophic’, it is important to analyse the ways in which catastrophe changes (and challenges) traditional practices of security and risk management. At the same time, it is instrumental to assay the effects of these new practices. This is the two-pronged approach undertaken in this book.

Liberal Terror

Global Security, Divine Power and Emergency Rule

Bradley Evans, University of Leeds, UK

This book offers a genealogical investigation into the phenomenon of terror in the 21st century. Terror has become the defining political emblem of our globally inter-connected age, resulting in an unprecedented global security effort which has given renewed purpose to the Liberal cause. This book charts these developments, moving beyond attempts at either establishing a universal definition or seeking to resurrect outdated Realist modes of analysis, arguing instead that the phenomenon’s transient and elusive nature is unavoidable given its alignment with changing Liberal attempts to strategise species life. The book argues that the tendency to write of terror in morally inclusive terms reveals to us the political-theology at work in which Liberalism affords itself divine status. Terror as such is the generative principle of its very formation, providing us with the truest diagnostic of modern Liberal societies, along with the rationalities which undermine its very reasoning. Thus, the book argues that while terror is widely recognised to be a complex, adaptive and emerging phenomenon, displaying many of the hallmarks of Liberal societies, the conceptual significance of these parallels continues to be overlooked.

Security, Risk and the Biometric State

Governing Borders and Bodies

Benjamin J. Muller, University of Western Ontario, Canada

This book examines a series of questions associated with the increasing application and implications of biometrics in contemporary everyday life.

This book explores how ‘virtual borders’ are created and the effect they have upon the politics of citizenship and immigration, especially how they contribute to the treatment of citizens as suspects. Finally and most importantly, this text argues that the rationale of ‘governing through risk’ facilitates pre-emptory logics, a negligent attitude towards ‘false positives’, and an overall proliferation of borders and ubiquitous risk, which becomes integral to contemporary everyday life, far beyond the confined politics of national borders and frontiers.

The New Spatiality of Security
Operational Uncertainty and the US Military in Iraq
Caroline Croser
This book provides a rigorous critical analysis of how the US military operates in Iraq, and the operationalisation of new technology in warfare. The book operates at two levels. On one level, it gives a user-friendly picture of the daily operation of a US Army Division headquarters in Iraq, through a detailed exploration of a specific command and control technology, ‘Command Post of the Future’. On another level, the book provides readers with the theoretical tools to disrupt the grand narratives that currently ‘explain’ the operation of violence in Iraq. It does this by developing a spatial vocabulary to describe the operation of violence, drawing on the works of Foucault, Lefebvre and Deleuze; and by developing methods associated with non-representational geography and science and technology studies (STS), utilised in conjunction with this spatial vocabulary, in order to perform a detailed material analysis of violence-as-practised.

The United States and the Security Council

Collective Security since the Cold War

Brian Frederking, McKendree University, USA

‘Brian Frederking’s new book should appeal not only to advanced undergraduate and graduate students, but to anyone interested in international organization, U.S. foreign policy, or global politics in the age of terror. In this volume, Frederking expertly engages debates over power, rules and institutions to highlight a ‘security-hierarchy’ paradox which plagues U.S. policy toward the U.N. Security Council. Highlighting tensions between unilateral temptations and multilateral imperatives, Frederking provides incisive case studies of evolving approaches to peacekeeping, international justice, sanctions, regional conflicts, terrorism. In the process, he demonstrates the contributions of an elegant theoretical synthesis to understanding the emergent global order.’ - Wesley Wildnaier, St. Joseph’s University, USA

Critical Issues in Global Politics

FORTHCOMING IN 2011

Democracy and Intervention

John Macmillan, Brunel University, UK

This book develops a systematic understanding of the conceptual, ethical, political and theoretical dimensions of intervention in an empirical/historical context. More specifically, the book aims to provide advanced undergraduate and postgraduate students with a systematic and critical understanding of ‘intervention/ non-intervention’ through examination of the doctrine’s conceptual, theoretical and normative underpinnings; the theory and practice of intervention in different historical periods; and the notion of ‘intervention’ as a (problematical) mode of governance that raises important theoretical as well as practical issues given contemporary conditions of globalisation.

The book will focus primarily on the theory and practice of intervention as pertaining to the nexus between democracy/democracies and international society, but will extend beyond this core focus as appropriate.

Global Horizons

We live in a moment that urgently calls for a reframing, reconceptualizing, and reconstituting of the political, cultural, and social practices that underpin the enterprises of international relations. While contemporary developments in international relations are focused upon highly detailed and technical matters, they also demand an engagement with the broader questions of history, ethics, culture and human subjectivity.

Global Horizons is dedicated to examining these broader questions.

After the Globe, Before the World

R.B.J. Walker, University of Victoria, Canada

‘Rob Walker’s After the Globe, Before the World is a radical text in the best sense of the word. It explores the roots of the international studies discipline, rethinks those aspects of the political theory canon on which the discipline’s traditional conceits have relied, and proceeds to articulate a reconceptualization of the state-world relationship. The work is the most important intervention in international studies/international relations thinking in decades. Any scholar who would presume to treat global politics as it is developing in this millennium must come to terms with Walker’s challenge.’ - Michael J. Shapiro, University of Hawai’i, USA

A sustained critique of the primary traditions of both political theory and international relations theory, this book provides an analysis of the relationship between claims about sovereignty and the spatiotemporal articulation of boundaries, borders and limits.

Positive Security
Paul Roe, Central European University, Hungary
Series: Routledge Advances in International Relations and Global Politics
This book explores current thinking about positive security and seeks to suggest a reformulated positive security concept, and to evaluate the efficacy of such a concept in terms of foreign and security policy.

Proceeding from a critical evaluation of McSweeney’s positive security approach, the author assesses the potential for reformulating positive security in other existing theoretical approaches: the Copenhagen School, the Welsh School, and largely Galtungian-defined Peace Studies and finally proposes a formulation of positive security defined as the ability of ‘orders’ (security referent objects) to achieve and maintain ‘just’ values, and secondly tackle the highly contentious issue of the use of force in the securing of these values.

In equating Positive Security with the achievement/maintenance of just values, the book, although locating itself within a tradition that is committed to ways of understanding and closedness towards the political understanding of companies.

New Norms and Knowledge in World Politics
Protecting People, Intellectual Property and the Environment
Preslava Stoeea, Hult International Business School, London, UK
Series: Routledge Advances in International Relations and Global Politics
This book examines the process of norm development and knowledge creation in international politics, and assesses these processes in case studies on protection from torture, intellectual property rights and climate change.

Drawing on the theories of constructivism and the sociology of scientific knowledge, author Preslava Stoeea demonstrates that international norms are a product of a sequence of closures and consensus reached at different social levels. She contends that it is this process which makes norms permeate the social and political fabric of international relations even before they become official principles of state behaviour. Proposing a theoretical model which indicates the stages of the development of norms, she studies the roles that various actors play in that process, together with the interplay of various types of power.

Hollywood and the CIA

Media, Defense and Subversion
Oliver Boyd-Barrett, Bowling Green State University, USA, David Herrera and James Baumann

Series: Media, War and Security

This book analyses representations in Hollywood film of the Central Intelligence Agency (CIA).

Hollywood and the CIA examines movies sampled from the each of five decades: the 1960s, 1970s, 1980s, 1990s, 2000s, and explores four main issues: the relative prominence of the CIA; the extent to which these movies appeared to be overtly political; the degree to which they were favorable or unfavorable to the CIA; and their relative attitude to the ‘business’ of intelligence. A final chapter considers the question: do these Hollywood texts appear to function ideologically to ‘normalize’ the CIA? If so, might this suggest the further hypothesis that many CIA movies assist audiences with reconciling two sometimes fundamental opposites: often gruesome covert CIA activity for questionable goals and at enormous expense, on the one hand, and the values and procedures of democratic society, on the other.

The Politics of Becoming European

A Study of Polish and Baltic Post-Cold War Security Imaginaries
Maria Mälksoo, International Centre for Defence Studies, Estonia

Series: New International Relations

This book weaves together perspectives drawn from critical international relations, anthropology and social theory in order to understand the Polish and Baltic post-Cold War politics of becoming European.

Approaching the study of Europe’s eastern enlargement through a post-colonial critique, author Maria Mälksoo makes a convincing case for a rethinking of European identity. Drawing on the theorist Edward Said, she contends that studies of the European Union are marked by a prevailing Orientalism, rarely asking who has traditionally been able to define European identity, and whether this identity should be presented as an historical process rather than a static category. The central argument of this book is that the historical experience of being framed as simultaneously in Europe - and yet not quite in Europe - informs the current self-understandings and security imaginaries of Poland and the Baltic States. Exploring this existential condition of ‘liminal Europeaness’ among foreign and security policy-making elites, the book considers its effects on key security policy issues, including relations with Western Europe, Russia and the United States.

Risk and the War on Terror

Edited by Louise Amoore, University of Durham, UK and Marieke de Goede, University of Amsterdam, the Netherlands

‘This anthology’s broad coverage of the relationship of risk to the war on terror’s proliferation of surveillance is extraordinary. The work of this excellent group of scholars is innovative and compelling.’ - Michael Shapiro, University of Hawaii, USA

Written by leading scholars in the field, this book offers the first comprehensive and critical investigation of the specific modes of risk calculation that are emerging in the so-called war on terror.

Tabloid Terror

War, Culture, and Geopolitics
Francois Debrix, Florida International University, USA

In this compelling volume Francois Debrix investigates at length the discourses now used by journalists, think tank intellectuals, foreign policy writers, and talk show hosts to represent the world as a threatening place ‘in need’ of American military violence. This volume is both a valuable contribution to contemporary thinking about media and war, and simultaneously a powerful critique of the practices that legitimize geopolitical violence. In lucid prose Debrix reasserts the importance of using critical social and political theory to effectively tackle matters of geopolitics, identity and warfare. This very timely book deserves a wide readership wherever citizens and scholars are concerned with violence and war, and how their contemporary justifications are shaping culture in so many places.’ - Simon Dalby, Carleton University, Canada

Political Discourse and Conflict Resolution

Edited by Katy Hayward, Queen's University, Belfast and Catherine O'Donnell

In applying discourse analysis to the study of the conflict and peace process in Northern Ireland, this book offers a new and pertinent way to understand and examine three core subjects: conflict studies, Irish politics and applied discourse analysis. As a product of collaboration and intellectual engagement between scholars from a variety of disciplines, institutions, countries and even generations, it analyses the close, yet still mystifying, relationship between political discourse and conflict resolution.

Governing Ethnic Conflict

Consolidation, Identity and the Price of Peace

Andrew Finlay, Trinity College Dublin, Ireland

This book traces the emergence of a common technology of peace and how, in the process, the liberal state has come to embrace illiberal subjects and practices. In this common technology of peace, the cause of conflict is understood to be competing ethno-national identities and the solution is to recognize these identities, and make them useful to government through power-sharing. The problem with consociational arrangements is not simply that they institutionalise ethnic division and privilege particular identities or groups, but, more importantly, that they close down the space for other ways of being. By specifying identity categories, consociational regimes create a residual, sink category, designated ‘other’. These ‘others’ not only offer a challenge to prevailing ideas about identity but also stand in reproof to conventional wisdom regarding the management of conflict.

Migration and Security in the Global Age

Diapora Communities and Conflict

Feargal Cochrane, Lancaster University, UK

This book is an interdisciplinary examination of several interconnecting aspects of migrant communities in the context of contemporary conflict and security. It aims to illustrate how the diversity of migrant populations cross-cuts political, cultural, social and economic spheres of activity. The book builds a connected picture of contemporary migrant/diasporas that reflects the fact that they exist within, and help to construct, an integrated and multi-layered political, social, cultural and economic milieu. While empirically focused studies are often case-specific and, while rich in local detail, lack comparative breadth or the ability to make connections and see irregularities across a number of cases that might be of interest to scholars beyond that specific area. This work intends to connect these literatures together more thoroughly. In particular, it seeks to demonstrate that political, cultural, economic and social factors all play important roles in helping us understand the actual (and potential) roles of migrant communities in conflict and security within contemporary society.
