This new Handbook gathers together state-of-the-art theoretical reflection and empirical research by a group of leading international scholars in the subdiscipline of Critical Security Studies. In today’s globalised setting, the challenge of maintaining security is no longer limited to the traditional foreign-policy and military tools of the nation-state, and security and insecurity are no longer considered as dependent only upon geopolitics and military strength, but rather are also seen to depend upon social, economic, environmental, ethical models of analysis and tools of action. The contributors discuss and evaluate this fundamental shift in four key areas:

- New Security Concepts
- New Security Subjects
- New Security Objects

Offering a comprehensive theoretical and empirical overview of this evolving field, this book will be essential reading for all students of critical security studies, human security, international/global security, political theory and IR in general.

Critical Security Studies
An Introduction
Columba Peoples, Swansea University, UK and Nick Vaughan-Williams, University of Exeter, UK

Critical Security Studies introduces students of Politics and International Relations to the sub-field through a detailed yet accessible survey of emerging theories and practices. Written in an accessible and clear manner, this textbook:

- offers a comprehensive and up-to-date introduction to critical security studies
- locates Critical Security Studies within the broader context of social and political theory
- evaluates fundamental theoretical positions in critical security studies against backdrop of new security challenges.

The book is divided into two main parts. The first part, ‘Approaches’, surveys the newly extended and contested theoretical terrain of Critical Security Studies, and the different schools within the subdiscipline, including Feminist, Postcolonial and Poststructuralist viewpoints. The second part, ‘Issues’, will then offer examples of how these various theoretical approaches have been put to work against the backdrop of a diverse range of issues in contemporary security practices, from environmental, human and homeland security to border security and the War on Terror.

The historical and geographical scope of the book is deliberately broad and readers will be introduced to a number of key illustrative case studies. Each of the chapters in Part 2 will act to concretely illustrate one or more of the approaches discussed in Part 1, with clear internal referencing allowing the text to act as a holistic learning tool for students.

This book explores the biopolitical fetishisation of technology in contemporary practices of war, and thus the tendency to write of terror in morally inclusive terms reveals to us the political-theology at work in which Liberalism affords itself divine status. Terror as such is the generative principle of its very formation, providing us with the truest diagnostic of modern Liberal societies, along with the rationalities which underwrite its very reasoning. Thus, the book argues that while terror is widely recognised to be a complex, adaptive and emerging phenomenon, displaying many of the hallmarks of Liberal societies, the conceptual significance of these parallels continues to be overlooked.

Security, War and Technology
Paul Virilio and the Global Politics of Disappearance
Mark Lacy, University of Lancaster, UK

This book analyses some of the key problems explored in Paul Virilio's theorising on war and security. Each chapter begins with an example from popular culture - from video games, on-line graphic novels to films from around the world - that begins to introduce the specific question and proceeds to develop a critical engagement with his work. One of the key themes that emerges through the chapters is the importance of the idea of 'disappearance' - the aesthetics of disappearance or the politics of disappearance - that is developed through his work: it will be argued that the politics of disappearance explored in different ways in his work provides a disturbing and insightful introduction to the key questions in the politics of security that will shape the twenty-first century.

Liberal Terror
Global Security, Divine Power and Emergency Rule
Bradley Evans, University of Leeds, UK

This book offers a genealogical investigation into the phenomenon of terror in the 21st century. Terror has become the defining political emblem of our globally inter-connected age, resulting in an unprecedented global security effort which has given renewed purpose to the Liberal cause. This book charts these developments, moving beyond attempts at either establishing a universal definition or seeking to resurrect outdated Realist modes of analysis, arguing instead that the phenomenon’s transient and elusive nature is unavoidable given its alignment with changing Liberal attempts to strategise species life. The book argues that the tendency to write of terror in morally inclusive terms reveals to us the political-theology at work in which Liberalism affords itself divine status. Terror as such is the generative principle of its very formation, providing us with the truest diagnostic of modern Liberal societies, along with the rationalities which underwrite its very reasoning. Thus, the book argues that while terror is widely recognised to be a complex, adaptive and emerging phenomenon, displaying many of the hallmarks of Liberal societies, the conceptual significance of these parallels continues to be overlooked.

Militarism, Gender and (In)Security
Biopolitical Technologies of Security and the War on Terror
Cristina Masters, University of Manchester, UK

This book examines the biopolitical fetishisation of technology in contemporary practices of war, and thus explores how masculinity is being rearticulated within the context of US militarism. More specifically, it explores the ethico-political possibilities of technology and the attending claims that advanced technology are both liberatory and transgressive. It seeks to explore a dual question: is technology and its attending technologies of power liberating us from the strucures of gendered regimes of knowledge and thus from the deadly politics of war? In considering this question, the project inquires into the representative practices at work and the ethico-political implications therein. It does so by tracing various moments of militarism through both techno-scientific and masculinist discourses of power.

Security, Risk and the Biometric State
Governing Borders and Bodies
Benjamin J. Muller, University of Western Ontario, Canada

This book examines a series of questions associated with the increasing application and implications of biometrics in contemporary everyday life. It unpacks the risk practices deployed in the ‘war on terror’ by taking seriously the policy-makers’ imaginaries of catastrophe. If the governance of terrorism is essentially made possible by the description of the future as ‘catastrophic’, it is important to analyse the ways in which catastrophe changes (and challenges) traditional practices of security and risk management. At the same time, it is instrumental to assay the effects of these new practices. This is the two-pronged approach undertaken in this book.

Exceptionalism and the Politics of Counter-Terrorism

Liberty, Security and the War on Terror

Andrew W. Neal, University of Edinburgh, UK

This book is an analysis and critique of the concepts of ‘exception’ and ‘exceptionalism’ in the context of the politics of liberty and security in the so-called ‘War on Terror’.

Situating exceptionalism within the post-9/11 controversy about the relationship between liberty and security, this book argues that the problem of exceptionalism emerges from the limits and paradoxes of liberal democracy itself. It is a commentary and critique of both contemporary practices of exceptionalism and the critical debate that has formed in response. Through a detailed assessment of the key theoretical contributions to the debate, this book develops exceptionalism as a critical tool. It also engages with the problem of exceptionalism as a discursive claim, as a strategy, as a concept, and as a theoretical problem and as a practice.

Security, Law and Borders

Tugba Basaran, Brussels School of International Studies at Kent University, Belgium

This book focuses on security practices, civil liberties and the politics of borders in liberal democracies. The book develops three inter-related arguments: First, it questions the discourse of exception that seeks to separate liberal from illiberal rule in liberal democracies, as if both belonged to different times and spaces with a clear boundary line. Second, it questions the space of the government and argues for a turn in perspective from territorial to legal borders - legal borders of policing and legal borders of rights. Third, it emphasizes the role of ordinary liberal practices and ordinary law, and argues that law’s most powerful tools are also its most ordinary tools: the creation of legal identities, the creation of legal borders and the definition of the scope of legal rights.

Critical Perspectives on the Responsibility to Protect
Interrogating Policy and Practice

Edited by Philip Cunliffe
Series: Routledge Studies in Intervention and Statebuilding

This edited volume will be the first book to critically interrogate both the theoretical principles and the policy consequences of the Responsibility to Protect (R2P) doctrine. The contributors to this volume argue that the doctrine of R2P does not embody progressive values and that it has the potential to undermine international order. This book not only advance the novel set of arguments, but will also spur debate by offering perspectives that are seldom heard in relation to R2P. The aim of the volume is to bring a range of criticisms to bear from a variety of disciplinary perspectives, including international law, political science, IR theory and security studies.

Critique, Security, and Power
The Political Limits to Emancipatory Approaches

Tara McCormack, University of Leicester, UK

This book aims to engage with contemporary security discourses from a critical perspective. It argues that rather than being a radical, analytical outlook, much critical security theory fails to fulfil its promise to pose a challenge to contemporary power relations.

Tara McCormack investigates the limitations of contemporary critical and emancipatory theorising and its relationship with contemporary power structures. Beginning with a theoretical critique and moving into a case study of the critical approaches to the break up of the former Yugoslavia, this book assesses the policies adopted by the international community at the time to show that much contemporary critical security theory and discourse in fact mirrors shifts in post-Cold War international and national security policy. Far from challenging international power inequalities and offering an emancipatory framework, contemporary critical security theory inadvertently ends up serving as a theoretical justification for an unequal international order.

Reimagining War in the 21st Century
From Clausewitz to Network-Centric Warfare

Manabratu Guha, National Institute of Advanced Studies, Bangalore, India

This book interrogates the philosophical backdrop of Clausewitzian notions of war, and asks whether modern, network-centric militaries can still be said to serve the ‘political’.

In light of the emerging theories and doctrines of Network-Centric War (NCW), this book traces the philosophical backdrop against which the more common theorizations of war and its conduct take place. Tracing the historical and philosophical roots of modern war from the 17th Century through to the present day, this book reveals that far from paralyzing the project of re-problematising war, the emergence of NCW affords us an opportunity to rethink war in new and philosophically challenging ways.

Securing Outer Space
International Relations Theory and the Politics of Space
Edited by Natalie Bormann, Northeastern University, Boston, USA and Michael Sheehan, Swansea University, UK
This edited volume analyses a number of controversial policies, and contentious strategies which have promoted space activities under the rubric of exploration and innovation, militarization and weaponization, colonization and commercialization. It places these policies and strategies in broader theoretical perspective in two key ways. Firstly, it engages in a reading of the discourses of space activities: exposing their meaning-producing practices; uncovering the narratives which convey certain space strategies as desirable, inevitable and seamless. Secondly, the essays suggest ways of understanding, and critically engaging with, the effects of particular space policies.

The New Spatiality of Security
Operational Uncertainty and the US Military in Iraq
Caroline Croser
This book provides a rigorous critical analysis of how the US military operates in Iraq, and the operationalisation of new technology in warfare. The book operates at two levels. On one level, it gives a user-friendly picture of the daily operation of a US Army Division headquartered in Iraq, through a detailed exploration of a specific command and control technology, ‘Command Post of the Future’. On another level, the book provides readers with the theoretical tools to disrupt the grand narratives that currently ‘explain’ the operation of violence in Iraq. It does this by developing a spatial vocabulary to describe the operation of violence, drawing on the works of Foucault, Lefebvre and Deleuze; and by developing methods associated with non-representational geography and science and technology studies (STS), utilised in conjunction with this spatial vocabulary, in order to perform a detailed material analysis of violence-as-practiced.

State Terrorism and Neoliberalism
The North in the South

Ruth Blakeley, University of Kent, UK

This book explores the complicity of democratic states from the global North in state terrorism in the global South. It evaluates the relationship between the use of state terrorism by Northern liberal democracies and efforts by those states to further incorporate the South into the global political economy and to entrench neoliberalism.

The book explores state terrorism as used by European and early American imperialists to secure territory, to coerce slave and forced wage labour, and to defeat national liberation movements during the process of decolonisation. It examines the use of state terrorism by the US throughout the Cold War to defeat political movements that would threaten US elite interests. Finally, it assesses the practices of Northern liberal democratic states in the "War on Terror" and shows that many Northern liberal democracies have been active in state terrorism, including through extraordinary rendition.

Democracy and Intervention
John Macmillan, Brunel University, UK

This book develops a systematic understanding of the conceptual, ethical, political and theoretical dimensions of intervention in an empirical/historical context. More specifically, the book aims to provide advanced undergraduate and postgraduate students with a systematic and critical understanding of ‘intervention’ through examination of the doctrine’s conceptual, theoretical and normative underpinnings; the theory and practice of intervention in different historical periods; and the notion of ‘intervention’ as a (problematic) mode of governance that raises important theoretical as well as practical issues given contemporary conditions of globalisation.

The book will focus primarily on the theory and practice of intervention as pertaining to the nexus between democracy/democracies and international society, but will extend beyond this core focus as appropriate.

The United States and the Security Council
Collective Security since the Cold War
Brian Frederking, McKendree University, USA

‘Brian Frederking’s new book should appeal not only to advanced undergraduate and graduate students, but to anyone interested in international organization, U.S. foreign policy, or global politics in the age of terror. In this volume, Frederking expertly engages debates over power, rules and institutions to highlight a ‘security-hierarchy’ paradox which plagues U.S. policy toward the U.N. Security Council. Highlighting tensions between unilateral temptations and multilateral imperatives, Frederking provides incisive case studies of evolving approaches to peacekeeping, international justice, sanctions, regional conflicts, terrorism. In the process, he demonstrates the contributions of an elegant theoretical synthesis to understanding the emergent global order.’ – Wesley Wildmaier, St. Joseph’s University, USA

TEXTBOOK

Global Ethics
Anarchy, Freedom and International Relations
Mervyn Frost, King’s College London, UK

This provocative and original book challenges the commonplace that contemporary international interactions are best understood as struggles for power. Escriving jargon and theoretical abstraction, Mervyn Frost argues that global politics and global civil society must be understood in ethical terms. International actors are always faced with the ethical question: So, what ought we to do in circumstances like these? Illustrating the centrality of ethics to our understanding of global politics and global civil society with detailed case studies, Frost shows how international actors constitute one another in global social practices that are underpinned by specific ethical commitments.

Case Studies examined include:
• The War on Iraq
• The ‘Global War on Terror’
• Iran
• Human Rights
• Globalization and Migration
• The use of Private Military Companies.

Sovereignty
Jens Bartelson, University of Copenhagen, Denmark

This book summarizes recent academic debates on sovereignty within academic international relations and political theory. Recent scholarship has focused on the changing meaning of the concept of sovereignty in a variety of historical and political contexts, and under what conditions these changes in turn spill over into institutional change on a global scale. This book furnishes new insights about the current meaning and function of the concept of sovereignty within international relations and political theory.

Global Horizons

We live in a moment that urgently calls for a reframing, reconceptualizing, and reconstituting of the political, cultural, and social practices that underpin the enterprises of international relations. While contemporary developments in international relations are focused upon highly detailed and technical matters, they also demand an engagement with the broader questions of history, ethics, culture, and human subjectivity. Global Horizons is dedicated to examining these broader questions.

The Liberal Way of War
Killing to Make Life Live

Michael Dillon, University of Lancaster, UK and Julian Reid, King’s College London, UK

The Liberal Way of War is a remarkable book: theoretically sophisticated and conceptually nuanced. Building on, critiquing, and updating Foucault’s analyses of biopower and liberal governmental strategies, Dillon and Reid provide a powerful and challenging account of how contemporary politics operates both globally and over life itself. - Stuart Elden, Durham University, UK

The liberal way of war and the liberal way of rule are correlated; this book traces that correlation to liberalism’s original commitment to ‘making life live’. Committed to making life live, liberalism is committed to waging war on behalf of life, specifically to promote the biopolitical life of species being, what the book calls ‘the biohuman’. Tracking the advent of the age of life-as-information - complex, adaptive and emergent - while contrasting biopolitics with geopolitics, the book details how and why the liberal way of rule wagers war on the human in the cause of instituting the biohuman. Contingent and emergent, the biohuman is however continuously also becoming-dangerous to itself. It therefore requires constant surveillance to anticipate the threats it presents to its own flourishing.

The book explains how, in making life live, liberal rule finds its expression, today, in making the biohuman live the emergency of its emergence. Thus does liberal peace become the continuation of war by other means. Just as the information and molecular revolutions have combined to transform liberal military-strategic thinking, so also has it contributed to the discourse of global danger through which global liberal governance currently legitimates the liberal way of war.

Corporate Security, Terrorism and Risk

Karen Lund Petersen, University of Copenhagen, Denmark
Series: Routledge Advances in International Relations and Global Politics

Situated with the debate on terrorism risk and security, this book investigates the role of private companies in counter-terrorism policies. Lund Petersen analyses how political actors and private companies, including airports, airlines, ports and food production companies, understand their role in the fight against terrorism. Challenging the modern understandings of national security and corporate risk, this book brings corporate understandings of the relation between corporate risk and national security to the fore and assesses degrees of openness and closedness towards the political understanding of companies.

New Norms and Knowledge in World Politics
Protecting People, Intellectual Property and the Environment

Preslava Stoeva, Hult International Business School, London, UK
Series: Routledge Advances in International Relations and Global Politics

This book examines the process of norm development and knowledge creation in international politics, and assesses these processes in case studies on protection from torture, intellectual property rights and climate change. Drawing on the theories of constructivism and the sociology of scientific knowledge, author Preslava Stoeva demonstrates that international norms are a product of a sequence of closures and consensus reached at different social levels. She contends that it is this process which makes norms permeate the social and political fabric of international relations even before they become official principles of state behaviour. Proposing a theoretical model which indicates the stages of the development of norms, she studies the roles that various actors play in that process, together with the interplay of various types of power.

Positive Security

Paul Roe, Central European University, Hungary
Series: Routledge Advances in International Relations and Global Politics

This book explores current thinking about positive security and seeks to suggest a reformulated positive security concept, and to evaluate the efficacy of such a concept in terms of foreign and security policy. Proceeding from a critical evaluation of McSweeney’s positive security approach, the author assesses the potential for reformulating positive security in other existing theoretical approaches: the Copenhagen School, the Welsh School, and largely Galtungian-defined Peace Studies and finally proposes a formulation of positive security defined as the ability of ‘orders’ (security referent objects) to achieve maintain ‘just’ values, and secondly tackle the highly contentious issue of the use of force in the securing of these values.

In equating Positive Security with the achievement/maintenance of just values, the book, although locating itself within a tradition that is committed to ways of promoting equitable and cooperative relations between humans and human communities, will also seek to pose contentious questions of violent - as well as non-violent -transformations.

Hollywood and the CIA
Media, Defense and Subversion
Oliver Boyd-Barrett, Bowling Green State University, USA, David Herrera and James Baumann
Series: Media, War and Security
This book analyses representations in Hollywood film of the Central Intelligence Agency (CIA). Hollywood and the CIA examines movies sampled from the each of five decades: the 1960s, 1970s, 1980s, 1990s, 2000s, and explores four main issues: the relative prominence of the CIA; the extent to which these movies appeared to be overtly political; the degree to which they were favorable or unfavorable to the CIA; and their relative attitude to the ‘business’ of intelligence. A final chapter considers the question: do these Hollywood texts appear to function ideologically to ‘normalise’ the CIA? If so, might this suggest the further hypothesis that many CIA movies assist audiences with reconciling two sometimes fundamental opposites: often gruesome covert CIA activity for questionable goals and at enormous expense, on the one hand, and the values and procedures of democratic society, on the other.

The Politics of Becoming European
A Study of Polish and Baltic Post-Cold War Security Imaginaries
Maria Mälksoo, International Centre for Defence Studies, Estonia
Series: New International Relations
This book weaves together perspectives drawn from critical international relations, anthropology and social theory in order to understand the Polish and Baltic post-Cold War politics of becoming European.

Approaching the study of Europe’s eastern enlargement through a post-colonial critique, author Maria Mälksoo makes a convincing case for a rethinking of European identity. Drawing on the theorist Edward Said, she contends that studies of the European Union are marked by a prevailing Orientalism, rarely asking who has traditionally been able to define European identity, and whether this identity should be presented as an historical process rather than a static category. The central argument of this book is that the historical experience of being framed as simultaneously in Europe - and yet not quite in Europe - informs the current self-understandings and security imaginaries of Poland and the Baltic States. Exploring this existential condition of ‘liminal Europeanness’ among foreign and security policy-making elites, the book considers its effects on key security policy issues, including relations with Western Europe, Russia and the United States.

Risk and the War on Terror
Edited by Louise Amoore, University of Durham, UK and Marije de Goede, University of Amsterdam, the Netherlands

‘This anthology’s broad coverage of the relationship of risk to the war on terror’s proliferation of surveillance is extraordinary. The work of this excellent group of scholars is innovative and compelling.’ - Michael Shapiro, University of Hawaii, USA

Written by leading scholars in the field, this book offers the first comprehensive and critical investigation of the specific modes of risk calculation that are emerging in the so-called war on terror.

Tabloid Terror
War, Culture, and Geopolitics
Francois Debrix, Florida International University, USA

In this compelling volume Francois Debrix investigates at length the discourses now used by journalists, think tank intellectuals, foreign policy writers, and talk show hosts to represent the world as a threatening place ‘in need’ of American military violence. This volume is both a valuable contribution to contemporary thinking about media and war, and simultaneously a powerful critique of the practices that legitimize geopolitical violence. In lucid prose Debrix reasserts the importance of using critical social and political theory to effectively tackle matters of geopolitics, identity and warfare. This very timely book deserves a wide readership wherever citizens and scholars are concerned with violence and war, and how their contemporary justifications are shaping culture in so many places.’ - Simon Dalby, Carleton University, Canada

Political Discourse and Conflict Resolution

Edited by Katy Hayward, Queen’s University, Belfast and Catherine O’Donnell

In applying discourse analysis to the study of the conflict and peace process in Northern Ireland, this book offers a new and pertinent way to understand and examine three core subjects: conflict studies, Irish politics and applied discourse analysis. As a product of collaboration and intellectual engagement between scholars from a variety of disciplines, institutions, countries and even generations, it analyses the close, yet still mystifying, relationship between political discourse and conflict resolution.

Consociation, Identity and the Price of Peace

Andrew Finlay, Trinity College Dublin, Ireland

This book traces the emergence of a common technology of peace and how, in the process, the liberal state has come to embrace illiberal subjects and practices. In this common technology of peace, the cause of conflict is understood to be competing ethno-national identities and the solution is to recognize these identities, and make them useful to government through power-sharing. The problem with consociational arrangements is not simply that they institutionalise ethnic division and privilege particular identities or groups, but, more importantly, that they close down the space for other ways of being. By specifying identity categories, consociational regimes create a residual, sink category, designated ‘other’. These ‘others’ not only offer a challenge to prevailing ideas about identity but also stand in reproach to conventional wisdom regarding the management of conflict.

Migration and Security in the Global Age

Feargal Cochrane, Lancaster University, UK

This book is an interdisciplinary examination of several interconnecting aspects of migrant communities in the context of contemporary conflict and security. It aims to illustrate how the diversity of migrant populations cross-cuts political, cultural, social and economic spheres of activity. The book builds a connected picture of contemporary migrants/diasporas that reflects the fact that they exist within, and help to construct, an integrated and multi-layered political, social, cultural and economic milieu. While empirically focused studies are often case-specific and, while rich in local detail, lack comparative breadth or the ability to make connections and see irregularities across a number of cases that might be of interest to scholars beyond that specific area. This work intends to connect these literatures together more thoroughly. In particular, it seeks to demonstrate that political, cultural, economic and social factors all play important roles in helping us understand the actual (and potential) roles of migrant communities in conflict and security within contemporary society.
