Christopher Randall, who worked at the delicatessen on Elm and Sheridan, called the police to say that a robber had come in and demanded all the money from the cash register. The robber bumped into Sarah Jones, who was in the doorway, on his way out. The robber dropped a scarf, which was covering his nose, when he made his way out. Christopher Randall saw a tattoo that said "Love" on the robber's wrist. He remembered that the robber had on a green sweatshirt.

The police spotted a man who was running down Sheridan and asked him to stop. He wore a jacket that was green and had a tattoo that said "Love." When they searched him, he had a pocket full of money. "You're under arrest!" they said.
